The Joseph M. Bryan School of Business and Economics at UNCG was established in 1969, but its origins date back to the opening of the University in 1892. Then, the Commercial Department was one of the three original departments. When action was taken to establish the School, it consisted of two departments: the Department of Economics and Business Administration, which dated back to 1963, and the Department of Business Education and Secretarial Administration, which was established in 1940.

The Bryan School of Business and Economics helps students develop the knowledge and experience to become exceptional problem solvers that organizations and communities need. One of the largest business schools in North Carolina, the Bryan School boasts an AACSBS International accreditation in business and accounting that puts it among the top 3 percent of business schools in the world. Our students and alumni carry forward their Bryan School experience to make meaningful contributions where they work, live, and lead.
